

Did you know...
Botswana is amongst the countries with the lowest population density.

If you are tired of people then there is no better place to be than Botswana!

In terms of population density (the number of people divided into the size of the country) Botswana ranks as one of the least populated countries on earth... with only 2.7 people per square kilometre.

Only Australia (2.5 people km²), Namibia (2.2 people km²), and Mongolia (1.7 people km²) have less people to spread around!

On the other hand, if you don't mind being packed in liked sardines then Monaco, Hong Kong or Singapore are the places for you, all with densities above 6000 people km²!
